THE TEXT

1. An Argentine family is about to finish the trip of a lifetime: They have covered five continents in a 1928 jalopy on an adventure that began in 2000 in Buenos Aires, while bringing into the world and raising four kids who are now adolescents. Herman and Candelaria Zapp and their children have driven a total of 362,000 kilometers. The main source of revenue for all this traveling came from the Zapps' adventure book, Catching a Dream, which has sold about 100,000 copies.

2. "I have very mixed feelings. We are ending a dream, or fulfilling a dream," Herman said. "What will come now? Thousands of changes, thousands of options," said the 53-year-old. Candelaria, who was 29 when the trip began and is now 51, said her biggest and best discovery was the hospitable people encountered along the way. "Humanity is incredible. Many helped just to be part of a dream." The family visited no fewer than 102 countries and regions. Sometimes, they had to take detours because of wars and other kinds of conflicts, though.

3. The couple had been married six years, had good jobs and had just built a house, with plans to have kids, too, when wanderlust hit. Somebody offered them a car. It looks like something out of a gangster movie. The trunk acts like a kitchen storage area, and the heat of the engine is used to cool or heat water. Clothes and tools are stored under the seats. And for all these years, it was home sweet home. "It is a small house with a huge backyard, with beaches, mountains and lakes. If you do not like the view, you can change it," Herman opined. While out on the road, and with the first two kids born – Pampa, now 19 and Tehue, 16 – they enlarged the car by cutting it in half and adding another seat for the arrival of Paloma and Wallaby. For the kids, it was an unforgettable experience. They did their studies remotely and with home learning.
