THE TEXT

1. Ellie Hamby and Sandy Hazelip, from Texas, toured the world in 80 days, adventuring from the beaches of Bali to the deserts of Egypt. The two bonded over their shared interest in travel and commitment to prioritizing unique experiences over comfort while abroad. Hazelip says the idea for their trip originated a few years before they were each set to turn 80. "I just got the idea because we had traveled previously together internationally," she said.

2. Their first stop was a location that eludes even many seasoned travelers: Antarctica. Since that first venture, the pair have visited 18 countries across all continents. Over the past three months, the two women have ridden camels in Egypt, danced in Nepal, and observed the Northern Lights in Finland. And despite the challenges international travel presents, the best friends say they finished their trip without any arguments.

3. Although Hamby and Hazelip have finished their worldly quest and returned home to Texas, the two are already planning for their next trip. On their website, the duo shared a crucial piece of advice for any travelers worried about the language barrier on their own adventures. "You know, people ask us often about the language, how we manage it. We say there's one language and that's a smile," said Hamby. They also encouraged other older travelers not to let age hold them back. "Getting older does give you a little bit of wisdom of making decisions. I think at this age I appreciate so much of the beauty and I can really just soak it in," she added.

Most of the runners who dominate marathons worldwide train and live in Kenya. Author Adharanand Finn spent a lot of time trying to find out the to Kenyan marathon runners. "I had a fascination with the running style of the Kenyans, and it's not one thing but a mixture of several elements that make the people there so good distance running. There's the location, the way of life, and the environment. For a start, you have the altitude, the upbringing and the fact that children run around Then there is the simple diet and the lack of food. There's also the proximity to international elite runners to motivate anyone. Running offers a great chance to good money, to transform lives and whole communities," Finn says.

2) Put the bracketed words in the right tense and / or form. (3.5 marks)

Today's workplace is vastly different than ever before. More employers are offering remote work access, and teams must learn how (communicate) with members from across the world. The way we work (change) at present, and flexibility is key. The number of people who work (remote) has increased in recent years. As jobs requiring basic skills are outsourced to technology and automation, future workers will need more specific skills to compete. Online learning is uniquely (design) to meet this need. Over the last few years, we (see) how significant distance learning is. Teachers often give lessons through video conferencing, and classroom collaboration (rely) mostly on group messaging apps. While it can be (appeal) to long for the traditional classroom of the past, blended learning is here to stay.
